For years, he cheated machines by knowing the source codes.

In a large number of machines, the optic sensor worked separately from the physical comparator.

Another method of slots cheating used throughout history were fake coins.

Fake coins were used by con artist Louis "The Coin" Colavecchio to scam casinos for years until his arrest in 1998. augusta.

One man opened the targeted slot machine and attached 20-inch long piano wires to the whirring guts of the game.

The wires could then be used to jam the clock that measured the wheel rotations, allowing the group to manipulate the spins.
