For many TikTokers, a large chunk of their income still comes from outside the platform, whether that's from external brand deals or investing in completely unrelated ventures. In fact, that revenue diversification is often key to their success. That said, there are a few ways to get paid directly on the app. First announced in July 2020, the TikTok Creator Fund was one of the app's first programs designed to reward creators financially. The fund was initially worth $200 million, but TikTok estimated it would reach $1 billion by 2023. Meet minimum follower and video view requirements - although it's unclear what the exact numbers are.

YouTube Premium doesn't just allow viewers to get more out of the platform, it actually helps creators get paid, too. When you're part of the YouTube Partner Program, you'll get a share of the payments that go towards YouTube Premium. It works a little like ad revenue - the amount you get paid depends on how many views you get.

Launched in July 2022, Instagram's Creator Marketplace is dubbed a one-stop-shop for creators who want to make a living by partnering with brands. It's designed to make you more visible to brands who want to work with creators, and it keeps all messages for potential partnerships in one place.
