Loss-chasing can be expressed in multiple aspects of gambling behavior.

We examined three purported behavioral expressions of within-session chasing, n amely (1) when players decided to end a session, (2) how much stake they placed in each round, and (3) how quickly they played.

The current research is the first large-scale study to examine the effects of w ins and losses on the speed of play in real gambling.

For instance, three studies found that participants with greater problem gambli ng severity were more likely to play beyond a required number of rounds, and pla ayed more rounds in total in simulated gambling, compared to those without gambli ng problems [10–12].

People may also chase losses by placing a higher stake, sometimes beyond the am ount they initially intended to spend [8, 13].

Whether the losses are realized or not [20].
