A DBA, or "doing business as," is an option when you're registerin g your business name. A DBA is a fictitious business name, sometimes called an a ssumed name or a trade name, that allows you to legally do business using a part icular name at minimal cost and without having to create an entirely new busines s entity. You can accept payments, advertise, and otherwise present yourself in a business sense under this name while keeping it separate from your personal id entity.

A DBA also allows a single legal entity such as a corporation or LLC to operate multiple businesses without creating a new legal entity for each business. For e xample, you might set up a parent corporation with a generic name like LVH Web E nterprises, Inc. or Neighborhood Bars, LLC, then file a DBA for each website or bar if you're planning to operate a series or chain of them.

Note
If your company sells the same products, but to different audiences, you can als o use different assumed names to keep everything straight. For example, if you s ell women's clothing and baby clothing, you can set up two different assumed names to help you target each specific group.¹

If your business name implies that more than one owner or individual is involved , for example, like Shawad & Sons or The Anderson Group, or if you just want to use only your first name, such as Joe's Garage or Sam's Boat Rentals , you would typically file an assumed name. If you didn't want to use a DBA,
