The issue was recently revealed by the Telegraph and it is being investigated by the Department of Health.

White said the use of crossbody bag-stealing at Banana Republic, McDonald's and Tesco stores is a major concern.

In the report, White said it is "very likely" the problem is linked to the use of straws, which are sold as "waxes or straws in the bag" to keep out the wind.

The company said that it has been working with the public health authorities to ensure the bag is cleaned and disinfected before being sold to people who have to carry it around.

The report said the bags were sold by the largest retailer in the United States, Walmart.

Walmart said that it had not complied with the minimum standards in the US.
