The consumer champion uncovered that as many as a quarter (25%) of apps on the Google Play store out of the top 100 in certain popular categories have suspicious reviews, while in Apple's App Store, this figure reached up to one in six (17%).

One fake review broker site, reviewlancer, claims to have sold nearly 53,000 reviews and exchanged more than 130,000 reviews between apps.

Experts also analysed the content of the reviews using sentiment analysis and found that apps with fake reviews had a higher proportion of subjective five-star reviews favouring personal opinion such as 'best app ever' over factual information.

On the Apple App Store, one in six (17%) apps in the health & fitness category and one in seven (15%) apps in the games category raised red flags.

'Apple and Google are failing to prevent fake and suspicious reviews infiltrating their app stores, leaving consumers at huge risk of being misled into downloading apps that have been boosted through unscrupulous tactics,' said Rocio Concha, Which? Director of Policy and Advocacy.
